"the river contains more fish than all rivers in Europe do", she said.

I smiled.

"tobacco snuffs are ancient" she said,

She used them 8 thousands years ago among Indian tribes.
It was the only cultivated crop back then.
Long before any vegetable
The priest held up a flower looked at her over his shoulder and said :

The Mayan rain god gold smokes
tranquilized, unable to quit
the longest he stayed off was 14 months
"all of it torture" he said.

In rain and lightening we used to dance for him

Sandalwood & lavender calming body wash
Used ritually rather than recreationally
but that does not mean it was used infrequently.

They addicted themselves to tolerate higher doses.
Methodically, meticulously,

"to classify by effect upon consciousness", he said.
"tobacco is ingested by drinking, smoking, snorting, chewing, sucking, licking, applying, anointing, inserting"

"don't forget the enema," he said,
"that's a way in too".

he said "real essential oil shampoos are for a specific class (only)"
"Bland brands that destroy rainforests by palm-oil plantations are what you can't exclude ~~when addressing the world~~".
he said that - purifying purity doesn't make things better.
he didn't know what did but he said it was used to mask a body odor and it was offered to the goddess in the form of smoke..
"or foamy paste, that is to mimic a different condition of skin-quality," I added.

"A balm placed frequently on the skin of the dead"

"Some of the names literally translate as 'I have no idea, I have to ask my uncle when we're back in the village' " he says.

Written down phonetically in Latin printed from one book to the next, botanical science in all honesty.

~~"kakabroekoe", a plant on page 43, translates as "shit your pants" he says.
Possibly a laxative - possibly a joke.~~

"gosh I have to many friends with eco toiletries," he says before rinsing himself on the water surface leaving no stain whatsoever
